

Code of Conduct

All ACT Career Association members uphold a standard of personal and professional behaviour that promotes confidence, trust, productivity and a sense of belonging to the ACT Careers Association and community. Our work with fellow ACTCA members, children and young people and the broader community incorporate the values of respect for others, respect for community, integrity and professional collaboration.

Respect for others means recognising that everyone has something to offer and all relationships are treated with sensitivity, courtesy, regard and understanding.

Respect for the community means listening and learning from our community, acknowledging and supporting diversity and giving back to the community in respectful ways.

Integrity means being honest, fair, ethical and accountable in our dealings with children and young people, the broader community and each other.

Collaboration means actively sharing information and resources and working together towards our shared goals. It means seeking opportunities and relies on genuine and professional engagement with children and young people, fellow members and the broader community.
